Anecdote of Stonewall Jackson.
THORNTON, TAYLOR COUNTY, W. Va.,
September 23, 1866.

Editor Staunton Spectator.—I undertake to give you an imperfect account of an occurrence that took place at the widow Wills' at the time of the death of her son, who was a captain in the Union army. I will give it to you just as it was told to me, which was in these words:

The Union forces were all out of sight, and then the rebels came in view—came on and hurried after, and then came more and more still—a man (an officer evidently, for he had his staff with him, paused at the gate) asked a question or two of some one, alighted from his horse, threw the bridle reins over a post, and with a slow step, solemn mien, and reverently uncovered head, passed the threshold into the room of the dead, the loved and lost. He was not old, he was not young; stern he was in look, not comely, yet there was a something of benignity and kindness, and sympathy that gleamed out from under the faded old cap drawn down over his forehead. He gave a calm, steadfast look at the dead soldier—strong feeling was battling with the soul of the rebel officer, for a tremor played with his lips, and a transient tear wandered from his eye and bedewed his cheek. A calm, steadfast look on the dead soldier, on the widow, on the maid, and then he said softly, kindly, "Let us pray."

And oh! the depth of the feeling—the strength of the subdued earnestness in that stern-looking, poor old, dust-covered rebel, as he commended in low but eloquent words the widow and her brotherless child to the care and the protection and the comfort of the merciful Father of all. And oh! how he prayed that the angry surges of this ocean of war might soon be hushed by the still, small voice of the All-wise, and love be born of tumult to the now desolated sections. It was deeply, touchingly pathetic. It was not long, but very appropriate, very affecting, very sincere. He rose—touched the cold hand of the dead soldier—gravelly, lowly bowed to the desolate widow with a compassionate "God bless you," laid his broad, weather-stained palm lovingly on the bowed head of Ida, who quivered lip, saying "Heaven bless you," stepped noiselessly from the room, out of the house, mounted his steed, and his horse's hoofs were clattering down the road.

"Who is that?" asked the chaplain of some one standing near. "What officer is that who has just taken his horse and ridden away?" "Stonewall Jackson," was the reply. X.

U. S. Government Finances and Securities.

The Government of the United States presents to day a most extraordinary spectacle. It has emerged victorious from a war of unparalleled magnitude after four years of weary and desperate struggle; it has asserted its power at home and made itself feared abroad; it has, in a little more than twelve months, not only relieved itself from financial embarrassments, but developed a tax-paying power so extraordinary as to demonstrate clearly that the country which it governs is the richest in the world, and more wonderful still, it has shown its capacity to pay off the whole of its present interest-bearing indebtedness, in times of ordinary prosperity, in a little more than eight years. The total receipts of the Treasury for the year ending July 1st, 1866, were $556,039,195. There may doubtless be from this hereafter a considerable reduction in the amount of import duties, but any deficiency arising from this source will be amply made up by an increase in the receipts from internal revenue. It is apparently perfectly safe to put down the revenue at $500,000,000. The expenses of the Government proper may be summed up as follows: Civil, foreign and miscellaneous, $14,000,000; Pensions and bounties, $16,000,000; War, $50,000,000; Navy, $40,000,000; Interest, $140,000,000; total, $260,000,000. Here, then, is a balance of over $200,000,000, to be applied annually to the payment of the interest-bearing debt, which is now little over $2,000,000,000. There is no other country in the world which can make such an exhibit, and notwithstanding this, the United States bonds are worth nothing like half what good foreign Government securities are worth in Europe. British three per cent. are worth, for instance, about ninety, while United States six per cent. bonds, interest payable in gold, are worth only seventy.

A SOLDIER BOY.—During the late war, Willie Mustin, son of Mr. Kennedy Mustin, of this city—a lad then only eleven years old—left his home without the knowledge of his parents or friends, who used every effort to learn his whereabouts, but without success, and had long since concluded that Willie was dead, but last week his heart was made glad by his return.

—more so, as he was enabled in health, needing little care. After leaving home, he went to the army of General Lee, and acted as volunteer drummer up to the day of the surrender, receiving regular rations like the other soldiers, but to pay. After the surrender, sick and without money, he manfully went to work on a farm in North Carolina for a support, but his health became too feeble to labor. With ten dollars given him by the man he worked for, he has made his way home, where, under the kind care of parents and relatives, we hope he will soon regain his health. —Augusta Chron.
